There had been speculation that many more cultists were hiding out in the jungle, fearing reprisals for having escaped the suicide rite. Other sources had said that estimates of the camp's population were too high and that possibly only a handful of Jonestown residents had fled.

Treaty Publication Surprises U.S. Officials

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24 (NYT) — U.S. officials today expressed surprise at the publication by the semiofficial Egyptian newspaper Al-Ahrana of what it described as the text of the projected peace trea-

State Department officials were perplexed, however, by the motive of the Egyptian government in allowing the text to be published, It was unclear to these officials whether Cairo was trying to put pressure on Israel, or on the United States, or was possibly attempting to undermine the slow-moving peace negotiations.

The action by the Cairo newspaper came at a time when administration officials were off for the Thanksgiving holiday. High-ranking State Department officials involved in the negotiations were un-aware of the publication until they were informed by reporters.

terms by Egypt and Israel. The preamble, as published by Al-Ahram, deals with the linkage issue only in general terms, suggesting that a peace treaty between Israel and Egypt would be an important step toward an overall settle-ment in the Middle East.

On Tuesday, the influential inde-pendent Israeli newspaper Ha'aretz published what it said were the main points of the draft. It said the draft treaty had a preamble, nine clauses and four annexes. The main points in the treaty, as listed by Ha'aretz, did not appear to differ from those in the text published by Al Ahram.

 The linkage preamble says that the Egyptian-Israeli treaty is only one key step toward the search for a comprehensive Middle East peace, and that the framework of the autonomy plan is a basis for agreement between Israel and its other Arab neighbors.

Bolivia Army Seizes Power From Pereda

LA PAZ. Bolivia, Nov. 24 (AP) — The Bolivian Army announced at dawn today that it has seized control of the nation in an apparently bloodless coup that ended the four-month-old government of Gen. Juan

"We take over command of the country temporarily with the purpose of creating the Bolivia that was dreamed of by generations of Bolivians," an army communique said. It was delivered to the offices of news organizations by armed men in civiliao clothes.

The communique, signed by the army commander, Gen. David Padilla, promised to hold national elections and transfer power to a civilian government by August of next year.

It was Gen. Pereda's refusal to hold elections before 1980 that ap-parently set the stage for the coup, the fifth in the last 14 years.

Iceland's Inflation Has Created the Checkbook Ice-Cream Cone

REYKJAVIK, Nov. 24 (NYT) — The big leagues of inflation start here. Iceland is now a country where people pay for ice-cream cones with checks, buy a slice of ham for $1.70, and can sell their rusted twoyear-old cars at double what they paid for them new.

The traditional Icelandic tortures of cold, wind and volcanic eruption now seem manageable and comfortably predictable compared to the country's inflation rate, the highest in the West-It is about 43 percent, down from 55 percent in mid-August. Iceland, with a population of 222,000, is small. But with the annual per capita income at $8,290, inflation has the same impact here as it would have anyplace else where a color television set selling for $500 at the beginning of the year costs $750 by Christmas. The situation has created a special local strain of inflation copers and managers, and a number of people who feel they can play the system to their advantage. It has also led others to fear that Icelandie society has been irreparably burt by the experience, and that a generation of young people now exists that is totally disillusioned with the ### ideas of saving and planning.

"We don't like this role of being 'the little inflation champion," said Bjarni Bragi Jonsson, the chief economist of the Central Bank of Iceland. "But I would never wish it on America. No major country could live with the situation." Iceland has always been inflation-prone. The instability of prices for the fish catch, which accounts for 80 percent of export earnings, has made the country's income subject to sharp variations. At the same time, Iceland has built itself a set of social services on the Scandinavian model whose cost continually increases and could not be cut back without great public resistance. These elements combine with an extremely high demand for consumer goods that is, perhaps, a compensation for the difficult climate, a full-employment policy that has consistently kept the jobless rate at under I percent, and a wage-price index system that increases workers' pay every three months in proportion to price increases. In mid-1977, inflation was about 25 percent, after a temporary suspension of indexing. But a large, general wage increase that coincided with the inflow of great amounts of money into the economy set off a new upward spiral. Indexing was reintroduced in an attempt to conserve the public's purchasing power. "What's been happening over the last years bas made us change our way of living and thinking," said Hulda Ritchie, a secretary married to a bus maintenance man of Scottish origin. "We stopped remembering what anything costs. You just lose that instinct that tells you this is too expensive or not. In the old days, you bad a household budget. Now there's absolutely no point. You say to yourself, 'If I don't come out even at the end of the mouth, I'll воггом.

Mrs. Ritchie now huvs beef only on special occasions. The small cans of asparagus she used to serve are out of the question these days at about $3.30 each. In the last two months, haircuts have gone up 14.5 percent, soft drinks 18 percent and gasoline 15.2 percent.

Shoppers tell of being so surprised by price changes that at the end of a shopping expedition they wind up paying for their childrens' ice cream with a check. And a government employee reported that the French car that cost him $7,500 two years ago had about doubled in value through inflation and two devaluations of the krons.

The accepted way to stay ahead, or at least to survive the situation, is to borrow. Credit terms range from about 18 to 33 percent, with the most common lending rate for businessmen about 25 percent. Both interest rates and mortgages are partly indexed, but the pattern is clear: a borrower can always pay his debts in money that is cheaper

"Not everyone would like things to change," said Helgi Augustsson, a Foreign Ministry official. "There are people, just ordinary people, who have gotten very good at playing the margins. Once you've borrowed money, and that takes in just about everybody, you're not so very interested in seeing it all stop."

But this approach does not please everyone. Erla Gunnarsdottir. who runs a small dry-goods shop, says her irritation goes beyond changing the sticker prices on tubes of skin cream twice a month.

"We're doing terrible things to our children with this inflation," she said. "We've created young people who are selfish and entirely without patience. They buy everything. The mood is 'get it now, get it now.' It's not a very healthy one."

national product will grow by 3 percent this year. Moreover, Iceland, unlike the larger countries, can devalue without making great waves on the world currency markets. The country's export contracts, denominated mainly in dollars, remain the same, but more krona are made available - enough to meet the increased salaries, and enough to push up demand and the cost of living once again. Jon Sigurdsson, the director of the National Economic Institute, insists that Iceland's situation has nothing in common with the Iceland's economy is not in poor condition. The balance of pay-

What we've also learned is that inflation really means a tremendous amount of turning in place. It takes too much of everyone's time. It makes life too hectic."

Islamic Revival Shakes Regimes of All Shades By Jonathan Kandell

TEHRAN, Nov. 24 (NYT) — In Iran, a 2.500-year-old monarchy, backed by the most powerful military force in Central Asia and a Should be slashed to hold back the influx of Western goods and mores. Xenophobia has played a major role in the Moslem opposition surfeit of oil riches, is staggered by a loosely organized, unarmed opposition ted by conservative Islamic clergymen.

In neighboring Afghanistan, the pro-Soviet regime installed by a military coup earlier this year lashes out at its opponents as "foreign agents covering their faces with an Islamic mask" — and bastens to strengthen its own legitimaters by sublidice and the strengthen its own legitimaters. cy by publicly embracing the teachings of the Koran.

In Egypt Mostern fundamentalists last year assassinated a Cabinet minister who opposed their pro-gram. And in Malaysia, university students are putting pressure on the government to adopt a sharia (sacred-law) legal code aligning civil, criminal and commercial laws with Islamic doctrine.

From North Africa and the Middle East in Central and Southeast Asia, the winds of a religious revival are sweeping with various degrees of force through the world's 600 million Moslem faithful.

Vulnerable Regimes

Conservative and radical regimes both appear vulnerable. While the resurgent Moslem movement has taken special aim at the alleged excesses of Western influence, it is hostile to Marxist ideals as well.

For the United States, Europe and Japan, the primary concern over the Moslem revival focuses on bow its success would affect the supply of oil and the status of billions of dollars of investments in the area. The reduction of petrole-um exports and calls for the expulsion of foreigners during the current unrest in Iran have already created apprehension in the West. The Russians, who also saw part of their natural gas supply cut off by striking Iranian workers, appear uneasy over the Islamic revivalist movement's potential influence on the Soviet Union's own millions of Moslems.

Recently the Russians asked for an additional consulate in Libya, but quickly withdrew the request when the Libyan leader, Moamer Qadhafi, an Islamic activist, demanded in return a Libyan consulate in Tashkent, the major city in the heavily Moslem region of the Soviet Union.

Minorities Rattled

Within Islamic countries, the Moslem revival has rattled minorities fearful of religious or ethnic intolerance, businessmen concerned that a return to religious legal codes will hamper economic activity, planners eager to modernize their countries, and middle-class people comfortable with Western mores and materialism.

In Iran, now the center of Moslem unrest, the ingredients for an explosive revivalist backlash have been gathering for years. Be-ginning in the early 1960s, Shah Mobammed Reza Pahlavi strongly antagonized the religious establishment of the majority Shiite Moslems by stripping away its large landholdings as part of an agrarian reform program, and ending its dominant voice in education. marriage and divorce.

Furthermore, the shah ignored a testers with machine guns when 1906 constitution that divided political power among the monarchy. Parliament and the religious leadfirmed five deaths. But opposition sources claim the death toll was keeping with Islamic laws.

An industrialization program but unrest was reported simmering that started 15 years ago has cut the proportion of Iranians living in runortheastern Iran near the Soviet An industrialization program proportion of Iranians living in rural areas from 75 percent to 52 percent of the population. But the shah's vision of transforming his country into a global power bas proved less inspiring than the con-servative social and religious values that were left behind in the rural villages.

Religious Backlash

These traditional values have Rapid Growth been sorely challenged by the accelerating Westernization that followed a 1973 oil price boom. The arrival of 100,000 more Western businessmen, technicians and their families, the pursuit of Westernstyle affluence by the growing mid-dle and upper classes, the alleged moral laxity of the wealthy, the evident pervasiveness of government and business corruption, the films. nightclubs, liquor stores and other symbols of Western "decadence" - all of this helps to swell the ranks of the religious backlash.

movement in Iran, despite assertions by religious leaders that incidents have been the work of small groups of irresponsible fanatics.

Foreigners Rejected

A major reason behind the oil strike was the demand by Iranian employees that foreigners be excluded from petroleum operations. Similar demands have disrupted air transportation and the country's communications system, and even a steel-factory complex being di-rected by the Russians.

Non-Western minorities, including Kurds, Jews and Armenians, have also been shaken by the Moslem opposition movement.
Intolerance by Moslem fundamentalists has occasionally erupted other countries as well recently. In Egypt, President Anwar Sadat's last-minute intervention foiled a legislative attempt to declare the death penalty for anyone seeking to convert a Moslem in another faith - a move aimed at the Coptic Christian minority.

In Malaysia, a fundamentalist

Islamic organization known as the Army of Allah bas called for expulsion of non-Moslems, and has been accused of desecrating more than 20 Hindu temples.

In Afghanistan, the pro-Moscow regime of President Nur Mohammed Taraki has been trou-bled by a fundamentalist Moslem guerrilla movement based in Paki-

Complaints Reported

In a subsequent meeting with Benjamin Civiletti, then chief of the Criminal Division of the Justice Department and now deputy attorney general, the two congressmen reported that they and many other members of Congress had received complaints from former cult members and from parents of children who had joined religious sects that members were often brainwashed and not in control of their own

According to congressional aides and members of parents' groups, the two congressmen had also been supplied with "at least a dozen" reports of physical violence, including beatings, used as a disciplinary technique by certain cults.

The detegation that met with Mr. Civiletti, which also included congressional staff members and experts on mind control, reportedly gave him and other Justice Department officials a long dissertation on the problems created by a wide range of groups in the United States that take young adults into private camps and training schools. About 10 weeks after the meeting, Mr. Civiletti reported in a letter to Rep. Giaimo: "It continues to be the position of the Criminal Division that allegations of brainwashing, mind control, thought reform or coercive persussion' would not support a prose-cution under the federal kidnapping statute."

His letter, prepared by Robert Keuch, a deputy assistant attorney general, said the department believed that the federal statute was to "outlaw interstate kidnapping.

U.S. Said to Accept Hai Hong Left-Outs

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia, nounced earlier this week that the Nov. 24 (AP) — The United States will take an additional 2,500 refugees from Malaysia, will accept all the Vietnamese refutional 2,500 refugees from Malaysia, nounced earlier this week that the were sighted off Dungan, 40 miles from here, on Wednesday night, Yesterday six hoats tried to land gees from the freighter Hai Hong that other nations do not take, Ossman Cassim, secretary-general of the Malaysian Home Affairs Minis-

As the flow of Vietnamese refugees into the northeastern Malaysian peninsula continued unabated. the newspaper New Straits Times reported today, that 20 to 30 boats were seeking to clude Malaysian naval patrols in order to land their human cargo.

Refugee officials here said that figure appeared to be inflated, and that they had reports that only six to ten boats with about 2,000 refugees aboard were heading for the northeastern coast. The Star newspaper, quoting police sources, reported today that fishermen in northeastern Malaysia have formed a "syndicate" to guide Vietnamese refugee boats into Malaysia for a fee. The fishermen, putting out in or-ganized groups to bring in the refugee boats, charged about $350 in U.S. currency, the report said. Refugee officials, objecting to the use of the word syndicate, said. "In any situation like this there are bound to be some fishermen who might make a quick buck, hut there is no evidence to show that it is an

Reasons of State

Once again two European governments have fallen into a public quarrel over extradition of terrorists. Once again, the only beneficiaries are the terrorisis themselves. This time it's the West Germans and the Yugos-

West German police had tracked to Zagreb four suspects in a series of terrorist murders. The Yugoslavs promptly jailed the four. But at the same time the Germans were holding Croatian nationalists whom the Yugoslavs wanted in connection with a long list of crimes, including the murder of a Yugoslav diplomat two years ago. West Germany refused to extradite the Croats. Tit for tat. Yugoslavia freed the four German suspects; they promptly fled, apparently to Algeria, that ready haven for any gunman or bomber who claims a political motive.

It is difficult not to feel a measure of sympathy for the Yugoslavs. For half a century they have been harassed hy the Ustashi, a hloody-minded and ohsessively nationalistic Croatian hrotherhood. A certain historical interest attaches to the Ustashi, as a survival of pre-World War II fascism that continues to exist and operate in Europe.

Their stated purpose is the destruction of Yugoslavia. They claimed responsibility for bomhing a Yugoslav airliner in 1972, killing 29 people. They have shot several Yugoslav diplomats during the last decade, and in 1975 attempted to assassinate President Tito with a time bomh.

Last year three of them shot up the Yugoslav mission to the United Nations,

The main suspect held by the Bonn government is Stephan Bilandzic, who, Belgrade claims, is the central figure in a great variety of recent terrorist activities. But the Yugoslavs' attempts to have Bilandzic extradited became a national cause among West Germany's large population of expatriate Croats. Some of the Croatian gunmen living in West Germany threatened to turn their attentions to German policemen and courts if Bilandzic were delivered to Belgrade. The German courts examined the Yugoslavs' evidence against Bilandzic, found it persuasive hut, hem-hem, unfortunately certain technical considerations required . . . etc., etc. West Germany refused to extradite him and other suspected Croatian terrorists. That's the point at which the Yugoslavs freed the four Germans.

Two years ago it was West Germany that wanted a suspected terrorist — the Palestinian known as Abou Daoud — and it was the French who held him. The French hastily found a technicality on which to free him before the formal extradition papers arrived. They feared that extraditing him would damage their relations with the Arah world.

At one level, these cases are failures of international law and, at another level, failures of international will. The reasons of state that governments evoke when they do not want to get involved serve the terrorists all too well. All of which hrings to mind the familiar excuse of the reluctant witnesses to a mugging: They don't want to get involved.

THE WASHINGTON POST.

In public remarks and in diplomatic messages to Havana last year, President Carter asked that Cuha release its political prisoners as one important step toward a resumption of normal relations. Fidel Castro has unexpectedly offered the hand of reconciliation to an estimated 1 million Cuhan exiles in the United States. To seal the hargain he has started releasing political prisoners, most of whom apparently want to come to the United States.

A first group of 46 prisoners, along with their families, has already reached the United States. Castro has furnished Washington with five lists containing the names of 288 more prisoners and 818 of their dependents; he has indicated that two more lists are coming soon. A spokesman for the prisoners estimates that there were about 3,500 in all. So more than 10 times as many names may be

Attorney General Griffin Bell has the authority to dispense with normal immigration formalities and to admit political refugees. But he is handling this situation in an odd manner. Evidently worried about a Castro plot of infiltration, the attorney general says he intends to pass personally on every name on every list to screen out "spies, terrorists and common criminals." It took more than six weeks to process the first list (and to screen out one person). At that rate, it might take years to process all the rest.

The attorney general may simply be un-easy about shouldering the responsibility for this latest influx of refugees while Congress is in recess, The State Department and some congressmen have privately urged greater flexibility, without much success. So far, all Bell has done is to streamline his procedures a hit hy dispatching more FBI agents and immigration officials to interrogate prisoners in Cuba. But he has refused to give up his personal, case-by-case litmus tests.

He should do so. Castro now says he will release 80 percent of the detainees, but only those permitted to enter the United States. The attorney general may regard them as some sort of menace to the United States: Mr. Castro plainly regards them as more of a menace to Cuba. Inordinate delay would leave some prisoners in limbo and others behind bars while Castro adjusts the tempo of releases to Bell's tempo of review. Washingion's delay is hardly consistent with President Carter's call for the prisoners' release.

International Opinion

Harrier Jets for China

Mr. Brezhnev's letter to Mr. Callaghan on the Subject [of the sale of British Harrier jet aircraft to the Chinese] follows a long series of warnings in the Soviet press . . . Britain is not embarking on a major program of arming China. The sale of Harriers would be part of a policy of contributing to Chinese security and building up friendly relations in the hope of lessening tensions in the area . . . The halance of power between the Soviet Union and China is such that the sale of Harriers would still have Russia infinitely the stronger military power . . . Britain should make the sale but without avoidable offense. There is nothing to be gained from making the Russians more rattled than they already are . . . It could he pointed out that if the Soviet Union feels threatened on two fronts. it can scarcely avert the threat hy worsening its relations with the West.

- From the Times (London).

The Chinese make it clear that . . . they want to talk about placing an order, running into millions of pounds and possibly the precursor of other orders worth millions more, for the Harrier jump-jet aircraft.

That order, if they eventually decide to go through with it, seems in a way symbolic: the opening up of a wholly new relationship between Britain and the new China. Yet at this stage the government response seems uncertain. Dr. Owen, in the Commons, unravels answers of inscrutable complexity. The order, he says, will he judged on political, strategic and economic issues disregarding the pressures of those who see our relations with China simply in terms of Harriers or no Harriers, and disregarding too those who wish to sell no arms to anyone. We have, he says, to achieve balance . . . Peking's equivalent of our local Sinologists must be at their wits' end to decipher the fellow . .

The last thing Mr. Callaghan should say to Mr. Brezhnev now is that we are frightfully sorry, we should never have got into this husiness, thank you for your kind warnings and we'll try not to offend again. He should instead defend his right to do this deal for what it is: part of the normal pattern of defense transactions with peaceful and stable governments...
—From the Guardian (London).

New Rhodesia Talks

Is Mr. Callaghan's appointment of Mr. Cledwyn Hughes to try his luck on the well-trodden hut hitherto ill-fated Rhodesia round a genuine fresh initiative or a new gimmick . . . At long last, it can be hoped that Mr. Callaghan is taking Rhodesia out of Dr. Owen's hands. If Mr. Smith is really invited to London, this is an important change in the Labor government's policy. Much depends, as Mrs. Thatcher pointed out, on how far the recent restatement of the Anglo-American proposals, to which Mr. Callaghan referred as the hasis of the new exercise, differs from the original version. This emhodies the vendetta of Dr. Owen and the American Mr. Andy Young against Mr. Smith and the multiracial internal settlement government. The proposals are dead and should be buried except for face-saving purposes . . . The only hope for a workable outcome is for Britain and America to offer Mr. Mugabe and Mr. Nkomo equal participation in the existing internal settlement government within a framework that will guarantee law and order and fair elections.

Key to Cults: Mind Control

By Georgie Ann Geyer

WASHINGTON — There is one truth to come out of the hideousness of Guyana, and it is a truth that — from the U.S. prisoners of war in Korea to Patty Hearst — we have been unwilling to recognize. There is such a thing as brainwashing.

Bloated body piled upon body, a Houston doctor administering cyanide to mothers and they to their habies, is not some horror without roots. It is as American as, to use some very black and stark humor,

As Dr. Stephen Hersh, a psychiatrist at the National Institute of Mental Health who is a specialist on religious cults, tells me. "Yes, now we will hopefully do more research on how people can be controlled, how they can be made to do things they would not the most aggressive and pugnacious of the president's opponents.

And now we see not only the horror of it in the

This is going to create some awk-ward problems in the Foreign Rela-tions Committee not only for Church, but for the Republican leader, Sen. Baker, for Helms is not famous for handling sensitive for-eign policy information with discre-

In the last few years, since Bill Fulbright was chairman, the con-too supportive of the White House and the State Department, and not at all representative of the opinion of the Senate as a whole.

All this however, is now about to change. Church, as chairman, will

Expansion

The Russian-Japanese War followed Japan's expansion into China a decade earlier; it was a contest with czarist Russia for supremacy in the Far East, where their interess clashed, and China and Korea were usually the victims.

In February, 1904, Japan declared war on Russia and began to obtain a foothold on the Asian mainland that lasted through World War II. The Russians lost a great land battle at Port Arthur, now part of China, and then lost a major sea battle in the Tsushima Straits that separate Japan and Korea. There the czar's Baltic fleet, having steamed halfway around the world (stopping en route in French Indochina's Cam Ranh Bay), was decimated by Adm. Togo's ships. It was, however, the Japanese who secretly approached Roosevelt. Joseph L. Gardner has recounted in his book on TR, "Departing Glory," that Japan insisted on direct two-party talks, to which the Direct party talks, to which the Russians were slow in agreeing. Roosevelt wrote to Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge that he found the Russians "treacherous and shifty" and the Japanese "entirely selfish without a veneer of courtesy." But, after doing some private diplomatic footwork. TR issued a formal call for a conference. By then it was June, 1905, and so he shifted the locale from non-air-conditioned Washington to cooler Portsmouth,

As a starter, TR had the two delegations, led by Russia's Count Serge Witte and Japan's Baron Juserge with and Japan's Baron Ju-taro Komura, meet aboard the presidential yacht, Mayflower, an-chored off Roosevelt's home at Oy-ster Bay, Long Island. TR conversed with the two leaders "loudly and somewhat recklessly in his imperfect French," managing a toast to "a just and lasting peace." followed by a shipboard luncheon.
Naturally, there were numerous critical today.

WASHINGTON — President Carter's Camp David summit and his subsequent role in the quest for Middle East peace have. only one modern-day U.S. equivalent: President Theodore Roosevelt's mediation of the 1904-05 Russian-Japanese War and the resulting Treaty of Portsmouth.

One big difference in the results, however, is that TR won the Nobel Peace Prize for his efforts, whereas Jimmy Carter will get only to bask in the glow accorded to Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Teddy Roosevelt seems an unlikely president to have won a peace prize. He was a jingo, an expansionist and a big Navy backer, who believed that one should "speak softly and carry a big stick." As he liked to say, he "took the Canal Zone" and dug the canal.

Shah's Program

The Joseph Kraft column "Flying Solo in the Near East" (IHT, Nov. 13) contains a serious error of fact with regard to land reform in Iran and as a consequence an unwarranted slur on the shah. Kraft states: "For a brief period in the early years of the Kennedy administration, the United States pressed him to democratize his regime. One result was the land reform, which he later came to claim as his own."

The facts are (and they are easy enough to confirm) that in the face of enusiderable opposition from the wealthy classes and religious leaders, the shah began in the early 1950s an urgent and extensive program to distribute the royal land allowed an international humanitarian organization to interview young refugees who have fled Rhodesia for Botswana to determine whether the refugees genuinely want to join his army, it was learned yesterday.

The initial survey of 5,000 refugees under age 16 supports Mr. Nkomo's contention that his recruits are volunteering to join the fight. An official of the survey team reported that only about 300 of the young black refugees said they preferred to remain as refugees in Botswana, a black state adjoining Rhodesia but not involved in the

ROME (IHT) — A few weeks before his release from Vakilabad jail, in the eastern Iran province of Khorosan, Richard Savin almost tripped over an Afghan slumped in a basket outside one of the cells.

The Afghan's right eye was hanging out of its socket. Both his arms had been broken at the elbows, and blood was dripping from his hands.

"I hardly noticed," said Mr. Savin. "In 2½ years at Vakilabad, the sight of beaten, tortured bodies had become so commonplace, it just didn't register anymore."

Mr. Savin, a 38-year-old Briton, entered Vakilabad in May, 1976, to serve a two-year sentence for smuggling 5.5 kilograms of hashisb from Iran into Afghanistan. He maintains that the drug was planted in his car in an obscure vendetta connected with his job selling weapons systems oo behalf of British Aircraft Equipment Ltd.

Mr. Savin served six months beyond his official sentence but counts himself hider

Vakilabad housed 350 political prisoners.

A typical case was that of Mohammed, an academic arrested by the Iranian secret police, Savak, for possession of two Marxist pamphlets. Hoping to extract information from him about other dissidents, Savak subjected him to daily beating and tortures including electric shocks to the temples and genitals, red hot ocedles under the nails and, gentials, red hot occales under the haus and, a favorite at the jail, the "hot-egg tango," so-called because, "it makes you thrash about quite a bit." The treatment consists in forcing a scalding, hard-boiled egg up a prisoner's rectum. "It slowly cooks your insides," Mr. Savin said. "Also popular was anal rape

Halfway through September, when rioting began all over Iran, the jail began to fill up with politicals at the rate of 70 to 80 a day, and led to a total population of around 5,000, Mr. Savin said. "They were cramming them into every available space."

"About that time, I went into what used to be a baggage room. It was full of people, squatting on the floor, every one of them heavily bandaged after their beatings. Politicals get thrashed as soon as they arrive, whether they've been tried or not."

Although comparatively rare in the case of Europeans, brutality was a normal part of life at Vakilabad. Standard, ceremonial bearings involved clamping a wooden yoke around a prisoner's ankles and raising his legs in the air with a chain. He would then be beaten on the soles of the feet with a lead-weighted rubber truncheon.

Treated even worse than the political officers were the Afgans, held, in almost all cases, on drug smuggling charges. "If an Afghani prisoner was foolish enough to complain, he'd have his month sewn up with a oeedle and thread," Mr. Savin said. "After a ceedle and thread," Mr. Savin said. In effect, almost the only way for prisocers to leave the jail was by way of a baksheesh or pardon granted by the shah on his birthday. New Year's day and two other occasions a year. Mohammed Kourt, an Iranian opium smuggler from Baluchistan, was given a four-year remission one one of the shah's birth-days after serving six years of his term. But he had, as frequently happens in Iran, been sentenced to both prison and death — in his case 10 years followed by execution. The day after his baksheesh, he was taken out into the desert by a platoon and shot through the bead. Drugs — opium, hashish and pills — were freely available inside the jail, however, as was virtually anything else that money could buy. Senior officers at Vakilabad made free use of opium and prisoners soon learned to fear one officer's drug "downers," when he would indiscriminately destroy all their mail.

"Everything was for sale." Mr. Savin said, including the prison's resident population of juveniles, aged between 6 and 15, who were usually serving short terms as petty thieves or for delinquency. Officers made free use of the boys, and would sell them to prisoners for 10,000 rials or $160 a time.

CNUGU, Nigeria — Psychological scars and some bullet holes remain in this former Biafran capital. but for most of the Ibo people the civil war and the reams of independence that went with it are history. Although the Ibos have oot forgotten, eight years after losing the war, they have re-entered Nigerian society, rebuilt their towns and again become an industrious community.

Their pride has withstood the bitterness of defeat.

"Most of the scars are being obliterated," said C.O.D. Ekwensi, a noted Nigerian tovelist and an Ibo. "But Europe still discusses World War II after 30 years, so you can't expect Nigeria to forget its war entirely in just eight years. There is still work to be done for true reconciliation."

30-Month War

Long the backbone of Nigeria's civil service and hite-collar merchant class, the 10 million Ibos declared their independence in the summer of 1967.

For the next 30 months they fought a losing war in defense of their eastern Nigerian homeland, which they called Biafra. The devastation was enormous.

As the federal troops advanced, the Ibos were forced from their first, capital in Enugu, retreating to other towns such as Owerri, Umuahia and Aba to set up defenses that soon crumbled.

By the time the Ibos surrendered, the death toll on both sides, mostly through starvation, was placed at up

Believing that the federal government has neglect them financially, they remain somewhat aloof polically and rely increasingly on themselves, even builting primary schools with personal contributions whe the central government fails to provide funds.

With Nigeria scheduled to return to civilian in next year, the Ibos could be a major force in decidir what party wins office. Thus far, though, they have remained divorced from the political process and generally skeptical of any civilian administration's ability of the political process.

There is a growing belief here that Nigeria's streng will come from being a unified nation, not a group ministates representing the major tribes. ### The Kenyatta Succession: Calm and Dignity Prevail

ened by an urgent phone call.
"Your Excellency," said the caller, "come down to State House. Kenya has lost its eyes!"

The moment Kenya had dreaded for 15 years had arrived. Jomo Kenyatta, who had ruled the country so absolutely that the future seemed unimaginable without him, was dead. Two and a half mooths later it is clear that Kenya has weathered the trauma of his death with calm and dignity.

Sidestepping a power struggle over succession that had been widely predicted, the government has negotiated a constitutional transfer of power of the sort that has eluded most other African countries. Kenya after Kenyatta is much the same as it was before — a combustible mix of competing tribes, a juxtaposition of rich and poor, but still an anchor of stability and prosperity in an increasingly troubled

There is a new alignment of principals around Mr. Moi now president Most of them were running the affairs of government under Kenyatta, but their power is greater now and they are flexing their muscles. The new insiders are pushing away some old-guard poliocians and business leaders close to the late president.

They are pursuing a drive against corruption, smuggling and other abuses that characterized the declining years of his rule.

So far, they are moving cautiously, threading an artful course between continuity and change that is not likely to disturb the status quo.

Cautious and Durable, Moi Picks His Way To Stability Through Tribal Antagonisms

"The question was always asked: What after Kenyatta?" said Charles Njonjo, the attorney gener-al. "I always answered the same way: Life will go

He gestured with an open palm out the window of his office overlooking the gardens of Parliament. "And, you see, the sun is still shining."

Mr. Moi, a 54-year-old politician very much lost in the Kenyatta shadow during the 12 years in which he was vice president, has repeatedly pledged to carry on his predecessor's policies.

Since he is a member of the tiny Tugen tribe from the Rift Valley, his accession means that titular pow-er has passed from the Kikuyu, Kenyatta's tribe, which fought the Mau Mau rebellion against British rule in the 1950s and whose dominance in all spheres has been the central fact of modern Kenya.

The change has assuaged the non-Kikuyu, who make up 80 percent of the population of 14 million, but it does not mean a radical shift in the power structure, since Mr. Moi became president with the backing of key figures in the Kikuyu establishment, who turned to him as the least divisive candidate and a trusted figure.

First among them is Mr. Njonjo, a dapper, out-spoken man of controversy and a staunch anti-Communist who is married to a white Kenyan and respects the British, who governed here from late in the 19th century until independence in 1963. So high has Mr. Njoojo risen in the new power constellation that some see his hand behind every

"I am one who supported the president from the start and I don't regret it," the attorney general said "It is because of this that we have stability. No one else could have the support he has throughout the land — and I say this as a Kikuyu."

Another early supporter was Mwai Kibaki, 47, the Urbane and ambitious, a London School of Economics graduate, he has been the brains behind Kenya's economic prosperity of the last decade. Three days before the inauguration on Oct. 14. Mr. Moi selected Mr. Kibaki to be his vice president, a move that appeased the Kikuyu by restoring the line of succession to them.

The choice did oot appeal to all Kikuyu, for Mr. Kibaki is not from Kiambu, the Kenyatta home, but from Nyeri, a region to the north that has been a rival for influence.

Kiambu, the heartland of Kikuyu traditionalisms and the prime source of government patronage, formed the nexus of the anti-Moi group, whose depth of feeling was summed up in the saying, "The presidential motorcade shall never pass beyond kiambu."

Place of Honor

Mr. Moi has skirted a confrontation by stressing his tunelage under Mzee, the title of "respected, elder" that summed up Kenyatta's authority. Members of the Kenyatta family have retained positions in government, and at public ceremonies his widow, Mama Ngina, is accorded a place of hour or.

The Moi faction has strengthened its hold over the Kenya African National Union, the sole political party, which became moribund under Kenyatta. The faction won all eight seats in a national party election — the first in 12 years — and is starting

He will still be president of the party then, and its leader is automatically its candidate for the presidence

To start a new party, they must register petitions in the office of Mr. Moi's old ally, Mr. Njonjo. Said the attorney general: "I think that President Moi is jolly well entrenehed."

After an absence (she was in Vienna) of three years, this American artist returns to Brussels with an exhibition of high quality indeed. Aghib's technique is flawless, infinitely meticulous and refined in the French sense, the compositions' complex structures of defined outlines harmonizing with differing patterned areas and relief insets. Colors spill softly into each other and strike sudden sparks of brightness here and there, like tropical fish circling underwater. ### A 'Middle-Class' Version Of 'Marriage of Figaro'

Jonathan Miller, as a prosets his hand to, and the new English National Opera's "The Marriage of Figaro." introduced at the Coliseum Wednesday night, is no exception.

The distinctive aspect of this production is Miller's rejection of the recently fashionable view of "The Marriage of Figaro" as a reflection of the social tensions that exploded in the French Revolution.

It is about social class, he said recently, but not about revolution, "It is," he said, "about the middle class, who are being put down despite their education, and they don't much like it. The most interesting quarter is formed by the bourgeoisie - Bartolo and Marcellina. Figaro and Susanna - and you scarcely bear the first rumbling of the tumbrels through them." DARIS, Nov. 24 (IHT) - The the search for an alternative. Comfirst California wines to make it into a classic French restaurant appeared this week at the Hotel Ritz. Madame Charles Ritz chose a 1977 Sterling Vineyards Chardonnay (at 75 francs one of the more moderately priced wines on her list) and a 1973 Sterling Cabernet-Sauvignon (90 francs).

Asked wby the Ritz became the first of France's famous restaurants to serve Napa Valley wines, Madame Ritz said, "It's a good thing. very interesting. We'll see what sort of reception they get, hut it had to be done sooner or later."

She seemed unfazed at the possihility of a storm of chauvinistic controversy bursting over the Ritz. Her restaurant has not been in the front line of the gastronomic war for attention in recent years.

Whatever the rumpus U.S. wines may raise in a temple of traditional French gastronomy, they were well chosen. The '77 Chardonnay is stilla little young, but fruity and aro-

This year's show groups 83 wines made and bottled by the grower; no wine companies are represented. It offers an excellent opportunity to taste a broad range of fine growers wines that won a gold, silver or hronze medal at one of the last two Paris agricultural fairs. And you can order them directly from the grower who will be pouring your free taste. Every afternoon enologists from the Institut Technique du Vin offer an initiation into the art of winetasting.

After two small crops in a row, the popular Sancerre and Pouilly-Fume have been soaring in price. Oyster fanciers are beginning to gag at the sight of 40-franc bottles (in restaurants) of what only two or three years ago were still inexpensive wines to accompany shellfish. ## Greek Antiquities Declining

The Art Market

By Souren Melikian

DARIS, Nov. 24 (IHT) - There comes a time when the art of a whole culture becomes so familiar that it somebow fades into the background, falling out of focus. Art historians go on dealing with the subject in their inimitable, learned books, but the public is no longer concerned. That moment is commercially deadly. Indeed the art market flasbes out the first danger signals, as it is now doing with regard to the art of Greece.

Stupendous as it may sound, the stupendous as it may sound, the trend is confirmed by two recent sales (on opposite sides of the Channel) of Mediterranean and Near Eastern antiquities.

The first was conducted at Drouot-Rive Gauche here hy Eric Buffetand. Prohably one of the best block. They rose skyhigh.

The mummified head of an unidentified king, with fragments of thin gold leaf still adhering to its cyclids (in keeping with ancient Egyptian royal hurial rites), should have been unsalable. The hack of the skull had been bashed in when the grave-robbers plundered it, and there just aren't private huyers for something that can hardly be characterizerd as an objet d'art. It crease in sales in less than 18 months, is Entre-Deux-Mers, a soared to 31,000 francs. A small hust of Isis, carved out of greyish hasalt in Ptolemaic times, had been defaced by wear and a nasty hreak across the chest; it went for just Deux-Mers, together with the

And then came the supposedly hig attraction — a limestone carving of the late 5th or 6th Dynasty that represents an Egyptian Official and his wife. Such items are rarely in the market, particularly in that size - 58 centimeters. Other factors helped: It belonged to a private collector, French sboe-designer Roger Vivier, and it had received lavish free advertising when it made the cover of the French art monthly Connaissance des Arts. But for all that, it is a clumsy piece of carving, made yet more unattractive by an ugly whitening (possibly due to amateurish cleaning) and some nasty dents here and there. Nothing daunted, a buyer paid a benomenal 330,000 francs, for which full credit must be given to

Triffing

However, that certainly did not apply to a magnificent archaic vase of the 6th century B.C., which had a frieze of eight draped figures in black on a red-brick ground. It cost Paris dealer Brimo de Laroussilhe a trifling 5,570 francs. Another superb vase depicting a young woman and two hoplites (Greek soldiers) holding shields went for 11,200 francs.

The crowning piece was an ont-standing, hig amphora of the 6th century B.C. that reflected the im-pact of Middle Eastern form and design on early Greek art. Some carefully-mended breaks in the lower part did not affect its beauty. At 40,000 francs ( from de Laroussilhe), it fetched the going market price - which is to say that the market does not do justice to it. A piece of that importance in Far Eastern art or Italian majolica would easily bring five or six times that much.

Three days later, the phenome-non repeated itself in a London sale at Christie's. Greek pottery fetched much the same prices; a large Attic vase (ca. 430 B.C.) with red figures on black ground, for instance, was knocked down at £2,620. The only category that did well, was, as usual, sculpture. A beautiful marble head of a woman, probably from one of the Hellenis ric sites on the Turkish side of the Aegean, made £4,400 — objects like this one have always been sought after by decorators catering

Egypt Entries Soar

Again, the Egyptian entries soared. A 6th-century B.C. basalt hlock of a seated priest, from a cache discovered in 1903 by George Legrain, whizzed to £15,400. That most of the other pieces from that cache are in the Cairo National Museum may have helped, but the figure is huge for a small (35 centimeters) piece with no great claim to beauty and from a decadent period. This paved the way for the auction's star item, a 25-centimeter high price. The contrast between the prices for Egyptian and Greek pieces is no accident, and is paralleled by un-derpricing elsewhere.

One of the finest bronze vases of the Celtie period discovered in France brought a mere 31,000 francs at the Paris sale. Recovered 138 years ago when a canal was being dug, it was published in 1905 and is one of a small group of hronzes numbering less than 10. Its artistic quality lies entirely in the perfection of shape — which, as noted, holds little appeal nowadays. Hence the price, ridiculously low when compared with Egyptian art, or, for the matter of that, any art, considering its rarity.

Alusuisse Sees 'Painful' Drop in Net

Citing problems caused by the higher value of the Swiss franc, Alusuisse (Swiss Aluminium) says there will be a "painful drop in earnings" in 1978 and that consolidated cash flow might fall about 20 percent from the 1977 level. The company says group turn-over in the first nine months this year was down 12 percent from a year earlier, but did not give figures. However, it noted that had turnover been calculated at constant exchange rates based on the position at Sept. 30, 1977, it would have been 5 percent higher

OPEC Held Likely to Moderate Oil Rise

FINANCIAL NEWS AND NOTES

By Clyde H. Farnsworth

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24 (NYT) — U.S. Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal is understood to be-lieve that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is likely to break the two-year-old price freeze on oil next month, but the increase will be moderate.

Mr. Blumenthal, who has just returned from a visit to four Mideast oil-producing countries, is said to be convinced that the price freeze cannot last through a third year. Other U.S. officials say the chances are good for a small increase, perhaps in a range of 5-to-7 percent when the OPEC countries will meet in Abu Dhabi in three weeks to

occurred on each of the four stopovers of the trip, showing how each fits into an apparent emerging pattern of moderatioo: Saudi Arabia — The biggest producer in the cartel, it has the final power to influence prices but for political reasons uses it sparingly. The Saudis had been expected to go into the OPEC meeting next mooth seeking a 5-percent increase. The Saudi oil minister, Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, instead told the Americans he would be trying for a freeze for the third straight

 United Arab Emirates smaller producer oo the Arabian peninsula, it generally follows the lead of Saudi Arabia, Its oil minister, Mana Said al-Oteiba, said: "If Saudi Arabia presses for a freeze, we will support Saudi Arabia. We will not allow Saudi Arabia to be isolated."

• Iran - The cartel's second biggest producer, it had been the greatest price hawk until last year, when it made its peace with Saudi Arabia, the leading dove, and backed the freeze. This year, because of widespread unrest and the need for continued U.S. political and military support, Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlevi told Mr. Blumenthal that Iran would take a back-seat position and follow the consensus of OPEC.

• Kuwait — One of the leading hawks. Kuwait had sent its oil minister, Rahman al-Atiki, to Washingtoo a few weeks earlier to report that the emirate wanted a 15-percent increase, complaining that this moderate" figure would not even cover the loss of purchasing power over the last year. A source close to Mr. Blumenthal, summing up the discussions in Kuwait, said the secretary "got the words that he ex-

It quoted him as saying that oil pro-ducing countries had suffered loss-es which he had estimated at about two thirds of crude revenoes because of the dollar's decline and world inflation.

U.S. Vehicle Sales Seen Off 3% in '79

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24 (AP-DJ) - The Commerce Department predieted that total U.S. motor vehiele sales next year will decline 3.2 percent from this year's record

The department said sales of domestically produced and import-ed automobiles, trucks and buses oext year would total 14.9 million units, down from an expected record 15.4 million units this year. The 1978 figure is 3.6 percent above the 14.9 million units for last year, the previous record.

bility and that any change of this substantive a nature also would have to be approved by the high level Economie Policy Group. The Council has been concerned, however, that companies are finding it easier to observe a guideline put forward as an exception, not an alternative, which requires firms to hold their price increases to one-half percentage point below their average price increases in 1976 or 1977, (say because of uncontrollable cost increases), it must make sure that its profits as a percentage of sale, or profit margin, does not

Less Attractive

Officials say that they worry if too many companies choose to con-trol profit margins, rather than prices, the administration will have a harder time reducing the rate of inflation to its goal of 6-to-6.5 percent in 1979.

As a result, officials are discussing ways to change the profit margin exception to make it less attractive to companies. They say the only workable approach they have developed so far is to couple the profit-margin test with a limit on the amount of profits a firm could earn — say around 6 percent — if it chose to control its profit margins rather than limit its price increases. If a company chooses to decel-erate its price increases, there would be no such limits. Officials said they will also change the wording in the stand-

He said the EEC was "very disappointed" and put the blame for the failure of the two-week-old meeting on what he called an "intransigent attitude" by the United States. There was no immediate comment from the U.S. side.

thought, when the boat was becaimed, that eventually there would be wind and then more wind reassured him about the future." He made a new best friend and was put off, when he met the boy's parents, to find that the mother was taller than the father. At mass in church, he practiced separating the fingers of each hand "alternately two-and-two, then one-to-one." When he grew older, his first wife "was so much in his mind that when traveling alone around the city he sometimes paid two fares by mistake." After he was divorced, he had many affairs, but "as he moved from woman to woman he saw that his first leclings about a new woman derived from his last feelings about the previous one, and this knowledge destroyed the effect."

Once, when he was lonely, he do-nated his time to a hospital, "chatt-ing with patients who had no visitors." He took out a oewspaper ad calling for a reunion of his class-mates. While in the army, he was so starved for sexual contact that he built a sad and funny fantasy around a spider on the edge of his foxhole.

Poignantly Unspectacular

In "Wrinkles," Charles Simmons continually discovers what I think ol as the poignancy of the unspectacular. He makes me feel the tragi-comedy of scale, the fact that we are moved by such small events. The epic implications of being burnan end in no more than this. We start our lives as if they were momentous stories, with a begin-ning, a middle and an appropriate end, only to find that they are mostly middles.

The central character, the "he" of "Wrinkles," has no name, but I recognize him. He is a man who grew up in a neighborhood, as I did myself, at a time when there were still neighborhoods, and he has passed most of his adult life wondering where all the connections, all the familiar things, have gone. In my own oeighborhood, and in his, too, I suspect, there used to be itinerant street bands, a saxophone, a guitar and perhaps an accordion, playing popular songs of the day. From wherever I was in my house, I would hear the saxophone first, a sound midway between a moan and a burst of laughter. It was im-possible to tell whether the man

That's the kind of sound "Wrin-Biography of Bardot kles" has. Simmons' tone goes beyoud standard irony to arrive something else, at a surprised tenderness that includes and assumes all the prior responses. He is past exclaiming or expostulating: musiog is what we all come to in the banned in South Africa. The direc-end, if there is time. It is our patent medicine, as well as our power and our glory. His character's affairs are as homely as a hot water bottle in a cold bed, as romantie as reading poetry in the bathroom.

Seeing Past the Joke

The failure of love has its uses too: it was not until Simmons' character wrote comic stories about his marital difficulties that he achieved his first success as a writer. As he ages, "He will think that lewer things are funny to him be-cause he understands more things." After a while, you get so you can see past the joke, or too far into it.

"Wrinkles" ends on this note:

"As he gets older he will sometimes try to inquire into his deepest wishes, hoping to find a weariness with life that would make death less fearsome, but can t." He is right: there isn't a weary line in the book. Recalling the first woman who showered him with praise, the hero of "Wrinkles" says that "she had had so many disappointments in her life the compliments were not convincing." Simmons has not been disappointed and his compli-ments are convincing. What he is complimenting in "Wrinkles" is life

French Doing More Reading

PARIS, Nov. 24 (IHT) - The French are reading more than they used to, according to a recent Louis Harris poll conducted for L'Express. The reading public has increased to 57 percent of the French public over 18.

The greatest increases were noted among women and youth. Only 37.5 percent of French women read in 1960. Today 60 percent do, compared to 55 percent of French men.

Those between 18 and 24 are France's most assiduous readers, 32 percent of those polled said that they read five or more books every three months compared to 22 per-cent of the general population.

age, caught the ball on his finger-tips and scored a 53-yard touch-Dallas possessions and backup fullback Scott Laidlaw - who went down standing up. It was Staubach's 21st scoring throw of the year — a league mark.

Septien added a 44-yard field goal in the third quarter and Laidlaw scored again on a 2-yard run in the third period after Staubach had hit Pearson with a 35-yard pass. Third-string fullback Larry Brinson scored Dallas' final points on a 39-yard run in the final period.

Washington's only points came on a 48-yard field goal by Mark
Moseley and a 16-yard throw in the final minutes from Joe Theismann to Jean Fugett.

Edge on the Redskins

The Cowboys' surprisingly easy victory in one of the league's most heated rivalries not only put Dallas in front of the division but gave it a ticbreak advantage over the Redskins if the two teams are dead-locked at the end of the season.

Any combination of Dallas vic-tories and Washington losses adding up to two, along with the same combination involving the third-place Philadelphia Eagles, would give the Cowboys the division of le.

The opening quarter yesterday was almost as one-sided as 15 minutes of football could have been. During the first period, Washington committed a face-mask penalty to keep Dallas' first field goal drive alive, committed an unsportsmanlike conduct penalty on a kickoff return and gave up a 49-yard Stau-bach-to-Tony Hill pass that set up another field goal.

Then the Redskins clipped on a kickoff return, Washington's John Riggins fumbled the ball away at his own 14 to set up Laidlaw's first touchdown and finally, on the last play of the quarter, surrendered a 59-yard run by Laidlaw.

Boston defenseman John Wensink collides with Larry Playfair of Buffalo (27). Playfair was taken to hospital in Boston after he regained consciousness. Boston went on to win the game. 5-2.

Kelly Out in 2d Season

NHL Rockies Fire Coach

DENVER, Nov. 24 (AP) - Pat Kelly, who took over as coach of the Colorado Rockies last season and led them to their first National Hockey League Stanley Cnp playoffs, was fired last night after Colorado lost to the Vancouver Canucks, 7-2,

It was the Rockies second straight defeat. Kelly left the cluh with a 3-14-3 season record. Kelly, 43, and in his 15th season as a coach, was unavailable for comment. His successor was not oamed when the firing was announced.

"Pat is an honest, hard-working person and has been through some trying circumstances which include a demanding early road schedule and an unprecedented rash of se-rious player injuries," Ray Miron, the Rockies general manager, said. "However, it is obvious because of our record that we had to make a change," Miron added.

Kelly's future role with the club remained uncertain, a club spokes-

Inspiration to Victory

If Uttley, 29, can recover his in-ternational class in play, his proven ability to bring the best out of his fellow forwards will make tomor-row's match a fine one. He inspires without fanaocizing and wins or, on rare occasions, loses with the respect of both sides.

Another thing, After the 7th All Blacks had whipped England (minus Uttley) at Twickenham io January, 1973, the English went to New Zealand in September and lost all their levers matthes but lost all their lesser matches but stunned an Auckland crowd of 55,000 hy winning the test match, 16-0. The match will be the All Blacks' 12th on an 18-match tour that started on Oct. 18 and will end on Dec. 16. The high points, of course, are the four tests. The Blacks laboriously beat Ireland, 10-6, on Nov. 4 in Dublin, A week later, in Car-diff, they had to cheat at a critical late lineout to beat Wales, 13-12. Scotland's turn will come on Dec.

Going for Four

The Blacks have won 10 matches and lost one, to the Irish province of Munster on an off day. They have scored 32 tries and allowed only four, and none in their last six games. ### The Films of Rene Clair: 'A Question of Neglect'

PARIS (IHT) — "That which makes the cinema is not to be discussed," French filmmaker Rene Clair said nearly 50 years ago. These days there is more discussing than filmgoing: the purist film huff, one French critic says, prefers reading and talk-ing about films to seeing them. But none of the talking, rehashing, reviving includes Rene Clair.

On Armistice Day he turned 80, and some of his films were shown on French TV. The celebrations seemed somewhat summary. Rene Clair is one of the most important names in French cinema, but he is definitely out of style. Francois Truffaut's book, "Les Films de ma Vie," includes essays on Claude Autant-Lara (once Clair's assistant), Sacha Guity, Albert Lamorisse and Jacques Tati, but none on Clair. The leading French film magazine, "Positif," has never done a piece on Clair. "It isn't that he has been the target of attack," says Micbel Ciment, a Positif editor. "It is just a question of neglect."

Clair, who has a radiant face on a a body tioned on a poll taken 10 years later by the In the United States Pauline Kael bas praised Clair's "choreographic grace and movement" and "poetic imaginative styliza-tion," while in England Penelope Houston wrote, in 1963, "Rene Clair's films have afforded more sheer pleasure than those of almost any other director one cares to name, which makes it seem the more unjust that this immensely talented artist should currently be going through a critical eclipse, partly because his qualities — all the perfec-tionist virtues of precision, elegance, conscious grace and good manners - are antipathetic to the younger generation of French directors.

First Filmmaker

A French critic, on the other hand, speaks of Clair's artificiality, his dryness and re-moteness from life, the too-literary quality of his films: "He is sophisticated but meek.

He gets no pleasure from seeing his own work on TV. Technically they are not the same as on a cinema screen. Anyway, I don't like to see my old films because I would like always to correct them and I can't.'

bent by the years and a rather formal, distant charm, says he is not aware of the attitude of younger filmmakers. He isn't very interested in film himself these days — he has always cared for writing and has published a half dozen books — and be gets no pleasure from seeing his own work on TV. Technically they are not the same as on a cinema screen," he said in his flat in Neuilly. "Anyway, I don't like to see my old films because I would like always to correct them and I can't."

Rise of Renoir

The fall in Clair's reputation has been matched by the rise of that of Jean Renoir, four years Clair's senior, who is probably the most loved director today and Clair's opposite in temperament. Renoir's ironic and humane "La Regle du Jeu" (1939) is one of the great film discoveries of one of the postwar generation and has belped put Renoir on anyone's 10-best list, in 1952 Clair's "Le Million" (1934) was 10th on such a list published by the British magazine "Sight and Sound," Clair was not menThe man himself is haughty, difficult. And when be became an official figure, an Academician, that didn't belp."

Clair was elected to the Academie Francaise on June 16, 1960, the first full-time filmmaker to become an Academician, "I go to the meetings when I am in Paris because I to the meetings when I am in Paris because I like them," he says. "It is interesting to meet some rather distinguished people wbo are not in my business." His biography in the French Who's Who identifies him as "Ecrivain et auteur de films. Membre de l'Academie Française" (Renoir is listed in less literary terms; "Auteur et Realisateur de films.")

Born Rene Chomette in central Paris, on the Rue des Halles, Clair was a journalist and then an actor (a profession unmen-tioned in his "Who's Who" biography). "I was a very bad actor, terrible," he says. was interested in motion pictures and decided to go to the other side of the camera."

He made his first film, "Paris Qui Dort," in 1923, followed the next year by "Entracte," shown during the intermission of the Ballet Suedois production of the ballet "Relache." The treatment was by Pica-bia, and Marcel Duchamp was one of the players. Clair was not a Dadaist — "I never belonged to a group" — and says Dadaists were not interested in films. "As far as I know they weren't. They were in trouble with Picabia. I was indifferent."

Clair's later films include "Le Chapeau de Paille d'Italie," "Sous les Toits de Paris," "Le Million," "A Nous la Liberte," "The Ghost Goes West" and, in Hollywood where he spent the war, "I Married a Witch" and "It Happened Tomorrow." The word most often used about his work is fantasy. Inventive and fanciful, be sensed from the start that the new medium of film was ideal fur the fantastic. "It seemed to me possible to make another world with another medium," he says.

Last Film

He made his last film, "Les Fetes Galantes," in 1965. A decade earlier he made his last important film, "Les Grands Manoeuvres," which has been called Sten-dhalian and which like Clair's "Les Belles de Nirit" (1952), starred Gerard Philippe. "T became great friends with poor Gerard Philippe," Clair says. "He was more than a friend, almost a brother."

Very early in his career, Clair said, "Film cannot enjoy the relative freedom of the other arts. So let us be resigned to being merely the artisans of the ephemeral."

He does not regret the end of his film career, "It isn't the opportunity that is missing," be says, "but the idea. I was always running after ideas. The most difficult part is writing the films. Directing them was just a game, it was amusing. But is was very seldom amusing to write an idea."
